College of Engineering, corporate sponsors recognize engaging Spartan engineers

Michigan State University's College of Engineering and its corporate partners recognized more than 160 students Tuesday, Feb. 20 for their academic achievements and participation in college activities and programming.

The annual event called The Dean's Showcase of Stars took

Close to 200 students applied to be among the more than 160 who received scholarships at this year's event.

MSU College of Engineering Dean Leo Kempel recognized Feb. 20 students who not only excel academically but also on campus by participating in various programs and activities.

"We know GPA isn't always reflective of effort," Burbatt said. "Students can come in and have leadership roles, work full-time and be taking classes on top of that. We want them to apply for these scholarships and know there's an opportunity to get them.

"They aren't just going to 4.0 students who aren't engaging with programming and efforts on campus."
